The shimmering springtime sunshine stants Adown the sloping mountains, And fir trees shoot their feathery forms From sides of gargling fountains,

Wafted from insects' voices, Floats round me like a melody, Which my sad soul rejoices. You monarch great, whose scaly trank

Supports his huge proportions, Yet bears aloft his emerald crown, Inspiring old emotions; And toward the clear and arching sky

He lowers in strength majestic Just as he stood in days of yore, When I, in finunts domestic Dreamed out a life of toll and care, By the great world unbeeded, And gathered, gazing on his form.

Support my spirit needed. A half a score of years ago, O earth and sky and mountains, I gazed upon these scenes and drank From inspiration's fountains

But I have changed, and the great world Sits now in rapt attentio Calling for more, while yet my lips Have failed to make half mention Of all the thoughts that years ago But racked and tossed and tore me, While I, in shade and solitude,

Saw no life-work before me, Have quiet days and earnest toil Without remuneration Not thinking that my dreams, O air. And earth and vegetation, Would in these days of active life

Work out their full fruition. And yet I know-and now my head Is bowed in deep contrition That but for the trials of the years Of long ago as teacher. I should not be prepared to-day

To be of truth a preacher. And as I stand and gaze once more On verdure, sky and mountain And on you monarch, lone and old, And on you gurgling fountains, The melodies of long ago, Wasted from insects' voices, Float o'er me, and in the music sweet

My saddened soul rejoices.

But it is because there are so many thousands of over-worked women around us on every side, staring blankly at their unconquerable work, and lives wasted at noonday, that we have told her story and reverently held back her name for this one brief moment of the eternal silence.—N. Y. Tribme.

choosing a partner for life, that will be the means of your future happiness instead of chosing one who will be the means of all your troubles, and who will, inois. Under the State constitution and the charters, women are eligible to an early grave? We say this to you any appointive office, but they are excluded from the practice of law and all emoluments under it. Every university and law school in the country, which ugged, searced and broken, matchless and magnificent, and white forever, as he throne of God.

THE YEAR SEVENTY-Two.—The year 1872 contains fifty-two Sundays—September and December each beginning cords, are these steep and suppendous on a Sunday, January, April and Jury on Manday. October is the only menth. they have spent years and money in
